Buying Mobile Home Insurance

In this episode, we cover buying mobile home insurance. Ensuring a mobile home is much the same as insuring a site-built home with a small, but important, difference. When deciding on insurance for a mobile home, it is important to realize that although the real estate market has proven that mobile homes appreciate, all insurance companies might not recognize this fact. When insuring your mobile home, you will want to insure it for what is called "Replacement Value" instead of "Actual Cash Value". Doing this will mean the insurance company reimburses you for what it actually costs to purchase and install a mobile home of a comparable size instead of what an insurance company decides the value of the home is after accounting for its "depreciation." Where with a site-built home, ensuring the Actual Cash Value means a homeowner receives what the home was worth plus the fair market value appreciation at the time of loss. Watch the video for the full details.
