These systems all differ in terms of system components, installation, be it DIY or professional, monitoring, be it self versus professional monitoring, storage, and smart home integrations. Some systems would work better for certain people more than others; for example, if you are already in the Amazon smart home ecosystem, then we'd recommend a system that's integrated with Alexa. We'll break it all down in the above video. Gabe Turner is Chief Editor of Security.org. Why wait until you're a burglary victim before installing a system? If you're going to get a home security system, why not do it before you feel violated and lose valuables and peace of mind? Out of all the systems I've examined, Travis is going to show you in this video what he believes are the top ten home security systems available. You can't go wrong with any of these, but we all have different wants and needs. Keep in mind these systems have major differences in ease-of-use, initial outlay and ongoing costs, expandability, minimum length of service commitment, and much more. Some of these you can install and monitor yourself, while others require professional installation and monitoring. Some require long contracts, while others you can use month-to-month. Watch this video and visit SafeHome.org to learn more about the systems that best suit you. Travis Goodreau is a retired burglary detective and home security & safety expert at SafeHome.org.
