Does finishing your basement increase the value of your home

It may add some additional living space and it does look nice in pictures when you're trying to resell - but are there any downsides to finishing your basement? Make sure you listen right to the end for my latest sales stats for Milton and Georgetown!

8 Ways a Finished Basement Adds Value to Your Property

Basements have the potential to significantly increase the value of your property. By finishing this space, you can add a significant amount of usable living space to your property. Learn eight advantages of a basement renovation.

- 1. Additional Bedroom: Finishing a basement can allow you to increase the size of the home. You may be able to add one or even two additional bedrooms by finishing the basement space. In most towns, in order for the space to be considered an actual bedroom, it must have two forms of egress. A form of egress is a way to exit the property. For a window to be considered a form of egress, a firefighter in full uniform must be able to fit through it. It must also have a closet to be considered a bedroom. Adding the form of egress does involve some work. It often involves breaking into the foundation walls of the property to create or widen existing openings. The addition of the bedrooms, however, can increase the value of your property and help you appeal to a wider range of buyers.
- 2. Additional Bathroom: Finishing your basement space can also allow you to add an additional bathroom. It can be a big draw to have a two bathroom home instead of a one bathroom home. Adding a bathroom will be more expensive than simply putting up drywall to divide other rooms. You need to spend money on a plumber if you cannot do the work yourself, as well as on the various plumbing fixtures. Tiling the bathroom will also cost money. While the initial cost may be greater when adding a bathroom, the functionality it offers to the homeowners may be an invaluable investment and therefore help you get the property sold quickly.
- 3. Great Return on Investment: Although it may not be considered "livable square footage" by the MLS, a finished basement does offer a great return. In the United States, on average, finishing a basement will give you a return of 70 to 75% of your investment. For example, if you spent $1,000 on improvements, it would increase the value of the property by about $700. If you spent $10,000 on improvements, it would increase the value of the property by about $7,000.
- 4. Way to Add Space if Zoning Codes Don't Allow Other Additions: Based on the lot size, there may be zoning restrictions on your property which prohibit you from making certain additions to the property. Often, you cannot expand out because it will bring your property too close to the neighbors. You may not be able to expand upwards either, especially if the home is already two stories. Therefore, this basement space becomes very valuable. It allows you to add functional space to the home without interfering with any zoning restrictions.
- 5. Income Property: Whether you are trying to quickly flip an investment property or keep it yourself as a multifamily, finishing a basement can allow you to add a rental unit. Of course, this unit would have to be approved by the zoning department in your town. Be sure to check with the town for their requirements. Selling Property: This rental unit can appeal to prospective buyers who are looking to lighten the load of their mortgage. The tenant's monthly rent would essentially be paying all or a portion of their monthly mortgage. Keeping Property: If you are adding the rental unit for a property you are holding onto, finishing the basement will greatly increase the cash flow of the property. While basement units do not command as much as above grade units, you will still be able to receive a significant income from a space that would have otherwise sat vacant.
- 6. Add Recreation/Storage/Guest Space to Home: Although finished basements do not typically count when calculating the square footage of the home for resale purposes, prospective buyers love to see a finished basement. Finishing a basement adds usable space to the home. An otherwise dark and dreary space can be transformed into a recreation area, kids play area, organized storage space or a little retreat for visiting guests. It is an unexpected pleasant bonus to buyers and they love the options that a finished basement gives them.
- 7. Sweat Equity: If you are handy, you may be able to save a significant amount of money by finishing all, or most, of the basement by yourself. Even if you have to outsource more complex issues, such as electrical work or plumbing, if you are able to lay flooring yourself, frame out walls, put up drywall or even paint, you can still save a significant amount of money.
- 8. Don't Necessarily Have to Use High End Materials: People do not expect the highest end finishes in a basement. In fact, hardwood is a terrible choice for a basement, as moisture issues can cause it to warp. Therefore, you can save money on the caliber of materials you are using compared to the finishes for the rest of the home. People are just happy to have a finished functional basement with heat, light and flooring.
