Real Estate Appraiser Salary (2019) – Real Estate Appraiser Jobs

How much does a Real Estate Appraiser make in a year? How many jobs are there for Real Estate Appraisers? How do you become a Real Estate Appraiser? In this video, we examine the average Real Estate Appraiser salary in 2019 and Real Estate Appraiser jobs growth. We gathered data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS). We look at the historical salaries and job growth of Real Estate Appraisers. These income and job statistics are from the Occupational Employment Statistics (OES) program. These salaries do not include bonuses or benefits. In our opinion, these are the most accurate salary numbers (better than indeed, glassdoor, and payscale). Appraisers and assessors of real estate provide a value estimate on land and buildings usually before they are sold, mortgaged, taxed, insured, or developed. Duties Appraisers and assessors of real estate typically do the following: • Verify legal descriptions of real estate properties in public records • Inspect new and existing properties, noting the characteristics • Photograph the interior and exterior of properties • Analyze “comparables,” or similar nearby properties, to help provide values • Prepare written reports on the property values • Prepare and maintain current data on each real estate property Appraisers and assessors work in localities that they are familiar with so that they know any environmental or other concerns that may affect the property's value. Appraisers typically value one property at a time, and they often specialize in a certain type of real estate: • Commercial appraisers specialize in income-producing properties, such as office buildings, stores, and hotels. • Residential appraisers focus on appraising properties in which people live, such as single unit homes and condominiums. They only appraise properties that house one to four units. When evaluating a property's value, appraisers note the characteristics of the property and surrounding area, such as a view or noisy highway nearby. They also consider the overall condition of a building, including its foundation and roof or any renovations that may have been done. Appraisers photograph the outside of the building and some of the interior features to document its condition. After visiting the property, the appraiser analyzes the property relative to comparable home sales, including lease records, location, view, previous appraisals, and income potential. During the entire process, appraisers record their research, observations, and methods used in providing an estimate of the property's value. Assessors value properties for property tax assessments. Most work for local governments. Unlike appraisers, who generally focus on one property at a time, assessors often value an entire neighborhood of homes at once by using mass appraisal techniques and computer-assisted appraisal systems. Assessors must be up to date on tax assessment procedures. Taxpayers sometimes challenge the assessed value because they feel they are being charged too much for property tax. Assessors must be able to defend the accuracy of their property assessments, either to the owner directly or at a public hearing. Assessors also keep a database of every property in their jurisdiction, identifying the property owner, assessment history, and characteristics of the property, as well as property maps detailing the property distribution of the jurisdiction.

To learn more about how to become a successful real estate appraiser, visit Chris's website tpblueprint.com If you are starting a business, you may be interested in my book on how to go from business ideas to starting a business: amazon.com/Business-Start-up-Ideas-Comprehensive-entrepreneurs/dp/1495261840 In this video, Chris Stafford explains what is a real estate appraiser, and how to become a real estate appraiser. A real estate appraiser works by him or herself a lot. In most states a real estate appraiser has to become licensed. You have to complete a uniform form for each appraisal. As a real estate appraiser, when you go to each real estate appraisal assignment, you have to go to each house, take pictures, measure the building, find comparable properties, and then determine the value of the property. A real estate appraiser values property in three ways. The first way in which a real estate appraiser values a property is the cost approach, which is a measurement of what it would cost to rebuild that real estate property. The other approach to appraise value of a real estate property is the capitalization approach, which is typically done for large buildings. Lastly there is the comparison approach to value a real estate property which is a matter of finding similar properties and see what the prices for them were. Being a real estate appraiser requires least marketing of yourself.
