Why Apple Removed The Home Button

When the iPhone X was released back in 2017, Apple officially dropped the home button in favor of something called gesture-based navigation. Now since then, they've still included home buttons on lower-cost iPhones like the 8, 8 Plus, and SE. But it's clear that the home button's days are numbered. And this major change has made many people feel confused and even a little uncomfortable. I mean, the home button has been around since the original iPhone over a decade ago, and users have become so familiar with its functionality that interacting with the home button has become second nature for most people. So there must be really good reasons for Apple to remove something that their customers have become so familiar with, and that's exactly what I'm going to explain in this video. Thanks to Skillshare for sponsoring this video!
